Karaites. The Karaites narrowed the definition down to suit their purpose, otherwise they would always find aviv according to the broader definition, and it would be useless for dictating the calendar. Their narrower definition is in reality the insertion of human authority—tradition—to enable them to declare when the new moon is as they like.²⁹⁴

²⁹⁴ The only issue that might seem to be unresolved is the location from which the observations should be made. According to precedent, when Israel was in the wilderness the location of the observations was in the wilderness. Therefore, it seems that wherever the camp of Israel is, then that should be the location. For this reason local observation of the new moon by Israel in exile cannot be ruled improper as long as the Temple is not functioning.
